COURSE CONTENT:

- This course is structured to introduce students to the most significant forms, styles, and concepts that define Western art in a historically sequenced manner, from the late Gothic in Italy (ca. 1300) through World War II (1945).
- Continuing with a search into the relationships between the visual arts and the society and artists that create them, the course will investigate the visual forms, values, and issues of each particular era. The emphasis will be on the relationship between visual forms as they relate to socio-cultural and political conditions, in order to form a better grasp of the art as it relates to the people who created it.
- The course will be broken down into twelve units with assigned readings in Janson's History of Art, Vol. 2. , 8th Edition.
- Each student will be held responsible for doing the readings and raising significant questions during the course of the lectures. Active class participation will be considered essential for grading considerations.
- One of the crucial aspects of any art history course is educated "seeing" and it becomes essential to your finding meaning in the text by carefully studying the plates, both black and white as well as color. Attending class, completing the assigned reading, taking accurate notes and learning both a visual vocabulary for critical analysis and a linguistic vocabulary for describing what you see are all crucial for learning the course material.
- An ability to relate the visual material with the historical material is also crucial for student's success.
